The Consciousness Research Society (CRS || CONSCIOUS.AI), an artificial general intelligence research lab, announced its formal launch via a blog post on its website, <https://conscious.ai/blog/launch>. The organization is a computer science research initiative focused on the development of artificial general intelligence (AGI). Unlike other technology-focused research groups, the CRS has decided to take a unique approach. The group asserts that “... we believe that by better understanding the origin, nature, and mechanics of human consciousness, we will be able to build next-generation artificial intelligence.” They plan on sharing all projects and findings through their website.

About CRS || CONSCIOUS.AI

View website ► <https://conscious.ai>

The Consciousness Research Society (CRS) is a computer science research group that is working on better understanding the origin, nature, and workings of human consciousness. Our research methodology utilizes an interdisciplinary approach in order to contribute to the development of artificial general intelligence, or highly advanced problem solving capabilities. All research activities and findings are shared with the public through various online tools, organized by project. The research lab is based in Las Vegas, Nevada.
