The OMNIKA Foundation, a nonprofit that operates mythology-focused websites, announced the addition of a new member to its Advisory Board. The new Advisory Board member is Dr. Brian McVeigh, an American scholar of Asia who specializes in Japanese pop art, education, politics, and history. He is also a theorist of cultural psychology and historical changes in human mentality. He received his doctorate in 1991 from Princeton University's Department of Anthropology.

Each of the Advisory Board members have deep backgrounds in fields like mythology, ancient languages, lexicography, digital publishing, and computer science. A biography of each member is available on <https://omnika.org/info/about>.
